Please join us to learn about the current status of photography in China and how the China Photographers Association has been a major influence in promoting photography in China.

China Photographers Association, established in December 1956, is the first national photographic organization in the history of People's Republic of China, a professional association composed of photographers of various ethnic groups nationwide, and a major force of promoting Chinese photography. China Photographers Association takes its task to unite photographers, photography practitioners and photography lovers from various ethnic groups, provide trainings to photographers, and promote the development and prosperity of Chinese photography cause. It is the most influential and authoritative photographic organization in China.

This program has been graciously sponsored by UTSA Confucius Institute.
